THE SUDDEN collapse of Monarch Airlines this week has brought holiday misery for hundreds of thousands and prompted a government mission to bring back Britons stranded overseas.

As the British Weekly went to press more than a fifth of Monarch passengers who were abroad when the airline collapsed have returned to the UK since what has been described as ‘Britain’s biggest peacetime repatriation’ started on Monday.

The Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) said that so far 119 flights had brought back 23,321 people, with another 11,091 expected to return on Wednesday.

The remaining 87,431 Monarch Airlines customers are expected to be back in the UK by October 15, at no extra cost.

On Tuesday it was revealed that the vast majority of Monarch customers will not receive an automatic refund, with administrators KPMG estimating that just 10%-15% of those affected have bookings protected by the Air Travel Organiser’s Licence (Atol).

Flights returning 110,000 passengers from overseas after Monarch’s collapse will cost about £60m, according to the UK airline regulator.

More than 11,800 were flown home to the UK during Monday on 61 flights, the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) said.

Monarch Airlines ceased trading early on Monday, leading to nearly 1,900 job losses and the cancellation of all its flights and holidays.

The government is set to pick up the tab for flying Monarch passengers home, but is talking to credit card companies about sharing some of the cost.

More than half the Monarch passengers due to be flown back this week are either in Spain or the Spanish islands, it has emerged.

The airline was reportedly looking at potential partners before the collapse, which was prompted, sources say, but by uncertainty surrounding the future regulation of the UK aviation industry after the Brexit vote. Terror attacks in Tunisia and Egypt, increased competition and the weak pound have been blamed for Monarch’s demise. The airline reported a loss of £291m for the year to October 2016, compared with a profit of £27m for the previous 12 months, after revenues slumped. Monarch’s owner, Greybull Capital, had been trying to sell part or all of its short-haul operation so it could focus on more profitable long-haul routes, and said it was “very sorry” it had not been able to turn around its fortunes.

Blair Nimmo, from administrator KPMG, said its collapse was a result of “depressed prices” in the short-haul travel market, along with increased fuel costs and handling charges as a result of a weak pound.

The UK’s fifth biggest airline was placed in administration at 04:00 BST on Monday - a time when the airline had no planes in the air.

Alan Jee was just one of thousands who were due to jet out this week and are now left uncertain if they will be reimbursed for a significant cash outlay. Mr. Jee was due to get married in Gran Canaria on Saturday and arrived at Gatwick airport with 30 members of his family.

“I have spent £12,000 on my wedding and now I can’t even go and get married,” he said. “I am gutted, absolutely gutted, and my missus is in tears, an emotional wreck.”

Transport Secretary Chris Grayling described it as the “biggest ever peacetime repatriation”.

Easyjet said it would be “really pleased” to hire former Monarch employees, saying it had 400 cabin crew vacancies at Gatwick Airport and 100 at Luton, as well as job openings for pilots and head office staff.

Shocking Collapse: Monarch was Britain’s fifth-biggest airline.
Stop fighting and do your job, grim May tells Tories

Embattled PM struggles to enforce party unity, tells Manchester conference MP must shape up for Britain

Theresa May has urged her squabbling party to “shape up” after warring cabinet ministers traded jibes from the platform of the Conservatives’ annual conference.

The prime minister closed the gathering in Manchester with a plea for her colleagues to set aside their own ambitions and “do our duty by Britain.” She also set out a package of measures to boost council housebuilding and limit domestic bills as she tried to check Labour’s electoral momentum since the snap election that robbed the Tories of their Commons majority.

Boris Johnson used his conference speech on Wednesday to intensify attacks on cabinet rivals such as Philip Hammond, the chancellor, who are pushing for a soft Brexit.

The foreign secretary, who had been “stirred up” on the issue of immigration by his present boss, Mrs May, issued a frank warning to her party that it must either unify or face the wrath of voters.

“Well, they would not do our duty by Britain,” she will say. “It is when tested the most by our capacity to rise to the challenge,” she will say.

Behind the scenes at the conference, splits over Britain’s future relationship with the EU, and the length and nature of any transition raged on during a four-day gathering that has advertised and amplified the deep divisions within cabinet.

Mrs May issued a frank warning to her party that it must either unify or face the wrath of voters. “Let us shape up and give the country the government it needs,” she said. “Beyond this hall, beyond the gossip pages of the newspapers, and beyond the streets, corridors and meeting rooms of Westminster, life continues - the daily lives of ordinaryworking people go on.”

But the issues, the problems, the challenges, that concern them; not focusing on our future, but on the future of their children and their grandchildren.”

The prime minister, who had to deny on Wednesday that she was ‘miserable’, insisted she has the resilience to carry on. “It has never been my style to hide from a challenge,” she will say. “It is when tested the most that we reach deep within ourselves and find that our capacity to rise to the challenge before us may well be limitless.”

Jacob Rees-Mogg, the backbench MP who has emerged as a favourite to take over the party among activists, mocked efforts to use the conference to show a united front. “It has become like an American presidential convention where we just expect people to turn up and cheer the great and the good. Perhaps not even American but Kim Jong-un style — if you don’t clap for long enough you’ll get in real trouble,” he told a fringe event.

Libya hits back at Johnson’s ‘cruel’ dead bodies remark

Libyans have reacted with anger at comments from Boris Johnson about “dead bodies” standing in the way of one of their cities becoming the next Dubai.

Salah Subhi, an influential member of the Benghazi parliament, warned that Britain could lose out on investment opportunities if the foreign secretary remained in his job. He called the remarks “cruel and unacceptable” and questioned whether Mr Johnson spoke for his government.

“Is this a reflection of the British government’s current views on Libya? Because this is not the UK that I know,” said Mr Subhi, who once held a high position at the British Council in Tripoli. The foreign secretary told a fringe event at the Conservative Party conference on Tuesday night that British investors wanted to transform Sirte into “the next Dubai” after a bloody battle to drive out Islamic State.

“There are good people there, but the issues, the problems, the challenges, that concern them; not focusing on our future, but on the future of their children and their grandchildren.”

The Prime Minister was responding to a day of ill-tempered remarks traded by rivals within her own party at Manchester on Wednesday.
Camilla seduced Charles to get revenge on philandering husband, claims biographer

The Duchess of Cornwall only chose to sleep with Prince Charles in the 1970s as an act of revenge on her boyfriend who was sleeping with the prince's sister, her biographer claimed this week.

Penny Junor said that in 1971 Camilla Shand, as she was then, was so fed up with the philandering of her boyfriend and future husband Andrew Parker Bowles that she got her own back.

She said that when she was introduced to the Prince of Wales by their mutual friend Lucía Santa Cruz, Mr Parker Bowles was “off with Princess Anne”.

“So when she was introduced to Charles he thought she was pretty special and he thought she was a bit of all right,” Ms Junor told the Henley Literary Festival on Tuesday.

The “Bonny Prince . . . was on his way to see her, she cleared the house”. Ms Junor writes in The Duchess: The Untold Story that she was married to one of the prince’s oldest friends, Anthony, later the 3rd Baron Tryon, but when the “Bonny Prince . . . was on his way to see her, she cleared the house”.

The revelations shed light on the convoluted love life of the heir to the throne and his now-wife in their younger years.

Ms Junor said her research had been revelatory about “how the upper classes bonk”.

She said she had discovered that Prince Charles had a series of affairs in his 20s and 30s, often with married women.

She said she would only identify one of them — Dale, or Lady Tryon, who he nicknamed Kanga.

The first MP, Sarah Champion, who intended to invest in Sirte and that Mr Johnson had not discussed the matter during his two trips to Libya this year. Damian Green, the de facto deputy prime minister, said that the foreign secretary’s remarks were unacceptable, and two Tory MPs have urged Theresa May to sack him.

When asked about the comments in an interview with Sky News this morning, Mr Green said that all ministers needed to be “careful with their language”. The first secretary of state later told the BBC: “Let me be clear: it was not an acceptable use of . . . it was not a sensitive use of language.”

Jeremy Hunt, the health secretary, called on him to consider his position.

Mr Johnson defended his remarks, tweeting: “Shame people with no knowledge or understanding of Libya want to play politics with the appallingly dangerous reality in Sirte.”

“The reality there is that the clearing of corpses of Daesh [ISIS] fighters has been made much more difficult by IEDs and booby traps. That’s why Britain is playing a key role in reconstruction and why I have visited Libya twice this year in support.”

Libya’s UN-backed unity government confirmed there were bodies of Islamic State militants still trapped in Sirte.

“We estimate between 50 and 150 bodies are still trapped under the rubble in the wreckage of buildings that have been built by al-Jabha. We believe them to be the bodies of Isis and their relatives who stayed to support them, though we offered safe corridors for people to leave,” a government spokesman said.

“We cannot clear the bodies because we lack the resources like bulldozers and tractors and because Isis rigged a lot of these areas with IEDs. We fear the remaining bodies will spread disease.”

Emily Thornberry, Labour’s shadow foreign secretary, said: “For Boris Johnson to treat those deaths as a joke is a more incomprehensible betrayal. UK business people can turn the city into a beach resort – is unbelievably crass, callous and cruel.”
Aung San Suu Kyi to be stripped of Oxford gong

Aung San Suu Kyi is to be stripped of the Freedom of the City of Oxford, where she studied as an undergraduate, over her response to the Rohingya crisis.

Oxford city council voted unanimously to support a cross-party motion that said it was “no longer appropriate” to celebrate the de facto leader of Myanmar. The council is to hold a special meeting to confirm the honour’s removal on 27 November.

The council leader, Bob Price, supported the motion, reportedly calling it an “unprecedented step” for the local authority.

In recent months, Aung San Suu Kyi has drawn increasing criticism for her apparent defence of Myanmar’s treatment of its Rohingya minority, described by the UN as a “textbook example of ethnic cleansing”.

Oxford council bestowed the freedom of the city on her in 1997, when she was being held as a political prisoner by Myanmar’s military junta.

The decision to remove the award comes after the Oxford college where Aung San Suu Kyi studied recently removed her portrait from public display.

The governing body of St Hugh’s college decided to remove the painting of the Nobel laureate from its main entrance.

A number of British institutions say they are reviewing or removing honours bestowed on Aung San Suu Kyi during her campaign for democracy.

Unison, the UK’s second largest trade union, announced last month that it would suspend Aung San Suu Kyi’s honorary membership and urged her to do more to denounce the plight of the Rohingya people.

Bristol University, one of a string of universities that awarded honorary degrees to the Burmese Nobel laureate from its main entrance.

The London School of Economics student union said it would be stripping Aung San Suu Kyi of her honorary presidency.

As a leader of Myanmar’s opposition, Aung San Suu Kyi won international praise and a Nobel peace prize in 1991. Despite being barred from running for president, she won a decisive victory in the country’s 2015 election, and was eventually given the title of state counsellor.

A POLISH FIGHTER PILOT who took part in the Battle of Britain has become the runaway winner of the RAF Museum’s poll to find “The People’s Spitfire Pilot”, thanks largely to the support of his countrymen both in the UK and in Poland. Franciszek Kornicki (pictured above), who lives in a care home in West Sussex, and recently celebrated his 100th birthday, received 325,000 votes – nearly 320,000 more than Douglas Bader, who came second with 6,300.

Born in Wereszyn, Mr Kornicki joined the Polish Air Force academy as a cadet. Following the Nazi invasion of Poland, he was determined – like many of his comrades – to carry on the resistance elsewhere. Having first fought in Poland.

Faithless Army husband ‘tampered with parachute’ to kill wife, court hears

An Army sergeant tried to kill his wife by removing parts of her parachute, causing her to spin thousands of feet to the ground, a court has heard.

Emile Cilliers, 37, is accused of two counts of attempted murder of his former wife, Victoria Cilliers, who survived the jump on 5 April 2015.

Mr Cilliers, who denies all charges, wanted to leave his wife for a lover he had met on Tinder, prosecutors said.

It is also claimed that just days before the jump, on 29 March 2015, the defendant tried to kill Ms Cilliers, 40, by deliberately causing a gas leak in the family home while he stayed away.

The jury was told the Royal Army Physical Training Corps officer lied to his lover, Stefanie Glover, that he was leaving his Army officer wife because she was having an affair and he was not the father of one of their children.

Prosecutor Michael Bowes QC said Mr Cilliers, who was based at Aldershot, Hampshire, had debts of £22,000 and believed he would receive a £120,000 life insurance payout on his wife’s death.

Mr Bowes QC said Victoria Cilliers was a highly experienced parachutist and instructor but when she jumped out of the plane 4,000ft (1,200m) above Netheravon Airfield in Wiltshire “both her main parachute and her reserve parachute failed”.

“Those at the scene immediately realised that something was seriously wrong with her reserve parachute, two vital pieces of equipment which fasten the parachute harness were missing,” he said.

He added that at the time of the murder attempts, Mr Cilliers was leaving his wife and treated her with “callousness and contempt”.

Mr Bowes told the jury that within hours of the failed attempt to gas his wife at home and “despite his complete disinterest” in her “he suggested that she might like to go paragliding the following weekend”.

The third allegation, which the 37-year-old also denies, is damaging a gas fitting, reckless to endangerment of life.

The trial continues.
Scottish restaurant tones down the menu – because keeping its Michelin Star is ‘too much trouble’

An award-winning Michelin star restaurant has said it is impossible for it to meet the guide’s exacting standards and still make a profit.

Boath House, which has held a Michelin star for the past 10 years, said the guide’s expectations are simply “at odds with achievable profit margins”.

It has now taken the decision to revert to a more informal style of dining, saying the cost of trying to produce Michelin star cooking is simply too high and too stressful.

Boath House’s owners, Don and Wendy Matheson accept it may cost them their star, but say that as well as being less stressful and expensive to maintain it is what modern customers want.

The move follows a request by the celebrated French chef Sebastien Bras for his restaurant to be dropped from the guide.

M. Bras said he dreaded knowing Michelin testers would appear at any time and that the task of meeting their standards was putting him under “huge pressure”.

Now Mr and Mrs Matheson - who have run the Boath House, near Nairn, in the Scottish Highlands, for 20 years - say they are giving up the traditional six course fine dining experience associated with Michelin in favour of a more relaxed cuisine.

Mrs Matheson said: “We’ve found our customers want something more informal, rather than a six course fine dining experience and that’s what we’re now doing. The Michelin guide will have to reassess us on that basis at some time and it may result in the loss of our stars. “Then again they may like what we do and decide we should retain the star, which would of course be very nice.”

She said the economics of running a restaurant to Michelin standards had meant their establishment had run at a loss for years and they were only able to stay in business because of the revenue from Boath House’ guest rooms.

“With Michelin dining you might need one chef spending his entire day preparing a single dish. You need incredibly attentive service and certain types of ingredients,” she said.

“All this is very expensive to maintain and puts an enormous stress on a small family-run business like ours.”

Under the continued guidance of its head chef Charles Lackley, the restaurant will now offer a simpler, three-course menu, with a choice of three starters, three mains and three desserts, based largely on local ingredients such as Scottish venison, west coast seafood, organic cheeses and vegetables and wild mushrooms.

“We’re diversifying and simplifying,” said Mrs Matheson, who moved from Berkshire to Scotland before buying and restoring Boath House 25 years ago. “Hopefully this will enable us to relax a bit. It’s very stressful trying to achieve a Michelin star.”

The current edition of the guide states that for winning or retaining a Michelin star.

A dressing down from Bananarama

EIGHTIES pop queens Bananarama take a dim view of modern pop stars who leave little to the imagination in skimpy stage outfits.

The group is reviving their original line-up with founder members Siobhan Fahey, 55, Koren Woodward, 59 and Sara Dallin, 56, for a sold-out UK tour.

“I love it when women say we were role models. We didn’t have to be glamorous or behave in a certain way,” says Keren. “We were at school when punk happened and we retained that attitude. I think if you spoke to girls now they would say they find it empowering to be on stage wearing next to nothing,” she continued. “But you shouldn’t have to do that. We made ourselves successful without pandering to what a man’s view of a girl should be. To go out and have success in a pair of dungarees was brilliant.”

Boath House’s “well-balanced modern menus showcase the chef’s skill and understanding”, adding: “Cooking is from their garden or orchard. Sit at bespoke oak tables and take in the lake view.”

New ‘critical line’ of inquiry in hunt for Maddie

POLICE searching for Madeleine McCann are investigating a new “person of significance”, it emerged this week.

News of the unnamed suspect came to light days after it was revealed that police are to get another £154,000 to fund four officers for six months.

It is now understood that officers involved in Operation Grange – Scotland Yard’s six-year £112million search for Madeleine – are pursuing a “critical line of inquiry”.

A source close to the search said officers are hopeful that the new approach could finally help them get to the bottom of the mystery.

Madeleine’s parents, Kate and Gerry McCann, are understandably informed of the development, though police declined to comment on the investigation.

The source said of the individual being investigated: “It is as much to rule the person out of the inquiry as anything else.”

Officers have so far investigated 60 persons of interest and 560 lines of enquiry. The team, led by Detective Chief Inspector Nicola Wall, insisted there was “still important work to do and focused lines of investigation”.

A spokesman added: “The inquiry has not reached a conclusion. We are continuing with determination.”

new leads

Operation Grange has reportedly conducted no formal interviews with the McCanns or the seven friends they dined with on the night their daughter disappeared. It is understood that police have been relying on Portuguese transcripts of key interviews with UK witnesses. But former Met detective chief inspector Colin Sutton suggested this might now change. “I would conduct fresh interviews with all the key British witnesses,” he said. “We’re talking about interviews given by the McCanns and friends through an interpreter, written down in Portuguese and then translated back into English, so officers from Grange can read them.”

The room for error would be enormous.”

Madeleine, three, vanished in Portugal in 2007, while she was on holiday with her family. It was just last week that the Home Office announced t h a t four detectives on the case have been given six months to find new leads or the probe could be shelved. Following the announcement, Mr and Mrs McCann, who had feared that the search could be axed, said they were “extremely thankful to the Home Office and Scotland Yard”.

Experts said the announcement could suggest there was a development that had not been disclosed.

Those limiting beliefs - and how to overcome them

IT’S a hoary cliché that the mind is the most powerful part of the body, which is great when applied for our own highest good, but it can also be destructive, depending on our beliefs and how we apply them to our everyday lives.

We all believe in something - ranging from Father Christmas as children to a god, religion or philosophy as we reach adulthood. And our beliefs shape our decisions on a daily basis. But there are also other beliefs - around relationships, friends, food and our lifestyles that don’t always work for us. But until we become aware of them and how they are affecting our lives, we can never change them… or improve the quality of our lives.

In today’s blog we are looking at three - our beliefs around ourselves, our food choices and fitness levels.

1. Self Beliefs
What do you believe about yourself? Do you believe you can achieve anything in your life or believe you have limited capacity and opportunity? Maybe you believe “money does not grow on trees” or that “kids should be seen and not heard”. Some of these are beliefs have been passed down from our parents, maybe from their grandparents… and may not even be true! But we still believe them because it’s “all we know” and learnt behavior. These self beliefs, if not uncovered and attended to, can have daily consequences on your life and the decisions you make - on a moment to moment basis.

2. Food Beliefs
Do you believe that food is only for pleasure? Or maybe you believe food is medicine and can indeed be delicious and nutritious, as we believe The Body Camp (www.thebodycamp.com) here on Ibiza! Maybe you think that food is only for comfort and should be used for things like keeping you warmer in the colder months of winter or getting over a painful break-up? Another belief some people may have is eating animals is okay. Some people believe by reducing the amount of diary products consumed, they will have a more positive impact on the environment and the body.

3. Fitness Level Beliefs
What you believe about how fit and strong you are? Do you believe that you will never be able to run a marathon? Or maybe you think you are weak, unhealthy and unfit? Some people truly believe they are very overweight and fat - even when it’s sometimes not true! However there beliefs are simply dictating the path of someone’s life.

So make time today and write down for each area listed above a new simple belief below. Here are some examples below:

1. A GOOD Self belief - “I am enough, I love myself and value my life”
2. A GOOD food belief - “I love to enjoy all foods in moderation, eat as natural as possible and only on occasion, I drink alcohol in moderation.”
3. A GOOD fitness belief - “When I put the effort into my fitness for 10 minutes a day, I always feel the benefits and am happy I took action - instead of neglecting the body”.

TIME FOR CHANGE: That inner pessimist has got to go…

Those limiting beliefs - and how to overcome them

Two Welsh builders who found a trove of classic film posters beneath a carpet have sold them for £72,000. In 1985, the men were renovating a house in Penarth when they found some 70 prints – dating from 1936 to 1941 – being used as underlay. The previous owner, a former cinema manager, had died, so they were allowed to take them home. Thirty-two years on, the pair put them up for auction hoping to raise a few hundred pounds for their retirement.

“They are honest hardworking people who have landed a bit of a jackpot,” said the auctioneer.

GETTING TO BE A HABIT: Another winning team without a single Brit in it! But at least they had the good taste to call themselves On Her Majesty’s Secret Cervix. They’re overpaid, over sexed and over here, but as Sandro pointed out, it is their country. (Photo Credit: Frank L’e Sanford)

AFTER YET another tragic event this week I really struggle to write this column. The horrific death toll from Las Vegas knocked me back as much as anyone but then I reminded myself that when I’ve been through a personal crisis I really do want the people surrounding me to actually ‘keep calm and carry on’.

It’s particularly difficult when we are far away from home and have nobody around to seek comfort from. I’m currently in the UK with my Brits in LA partner-in-crime Craig Young.

So it was extra nice to receive feedback from our weekly Brits in LA Pub Quiz host Sandro Monetti this morning. First off he wanted to wish a very happy birthday to Craig but he also wanted to report that the Brits in LA pub quiz goes from strength to strength with the Cat and Fiddle - already packed with players 40 minutes before the start time on Tuesday night and a real scramble for seats...but still a lovely, positive, fun, atmosphere.

And just 24 hours after the Vegas massacre, it was so nice for our shaken community to come together and heal and smile again. You can always rely on the Brits to bounce back - and the Americans too of course, and keep smiling and getting on with our lives.

The winners this week were On Her Majesty’s Secret Cervix - the second all-American team to win the Brits in LA pub quiz in what is increasingly shaping up as a Brits vs Americans friendly rivalry. Long may that continue as we move forward together.

Be safe out there…

Meet Sohm Kapila from Nottingham who moved to LA in January to pursue her acting and filmmaking career and has recently become part of the BAFTA Newcomer Programme.

Was there a particular reason you chose LA? I had visited a few times before and always felt as though I belonged here more than the UK. I felt more accepted and I also appreciated that the opportunities here were more engaging than some I’d been presented with in London.

What do you miss most from home? Obviously my friends and brothers back in the East Midlands/London. And my Dad who has retired in Jaipur, India (Running his own Good Marigold Hotel – he always asks me to do a Dev Patel for him – be the tour guide!)

What was your first impression of LA and has it changed since? Ha! Yes. Because my first-ever night in LA was in Bootsy Bellows and the cast of Jersey Shore were there circa 2013, posing around the club, getting rushed by fans. Everybody in there had their best “bitch” face on, and I remember my drink being nabbed too - charming. I thought I’d never live here; what a load of…. A year later I did a casting course, and with half the class being British, well…obviously I had a whale of time, and realised, it’s not where, it’s who. I’ve since made lifelong US/UK friends in LA who are really genuine, inspiring, down to earth people and from the heart.

What do you find the biggest difference is living here versus your time in London? Sun, sea and the transport system. It being a lengthy process if you dare use it, hence why I am glad I love to drive. I was a ‘boy racer’ back home and learnt to drive when I was 16. Even had a car in London because I loved the freedom of being able to go wherever – whenever. Cue Shakira.

What would you suggest to others who are thinking about making the move here? Visit first! Come on a short holiday. Do a course. Or just soak it up for a month or two – but defo visit first. It’s not for everyone.

Lots of our members join our group Brits in LA seeking out words of wisdom - what is the best piece of advice you’ve been given? “PERSEVERE” We all have knock backs, but in order to stay in the game you have to persevere. It’s not always easy. But it’s the best advice I’ve ever been given. Thanks Ray.

Lastly, how can we find out more about you? Are you working on anything at the moment? Yes! I’m working on “Angels of Hollywood Blvd” the Movie, with co-writer Elizabeth Chase – a character driven story set in a family-owned car garage who face closure from a swanky highrise development, right in the heart of Hollywood where the homeless are ever growing.

We are currently working towards a sizzle reel for the screenplay and have an indiegogo campaign at www.igg.me/at/angelsofhollywood where you can support, share, and check out the awesome cast, crew and location we have secured – already 20 talented people are now on board for the shoot day! Check out the website here www.angelsofhollywood.com and thanks again for your support. Remember, no contribution is too small and no share goes unnoticed!

Kroenke makes £525m offer to buy Usmanov’s Arsenal shares

FIGHTING FOR CONTROL: Alisher Usmanov, who owns 30.4% of Arsenal, and Stan Kroenke, who owns 67% of Arsenal’s majority shareholder, Stan Kroenke, has bid almost £525m to buy out Alisher Usmanov, the second-largest shareholder who has tried several times to wrest control of the club, it emerged this week.

Only last May the American resisted Usmanov’s latest attempt at a takeover, and within the past couple of weeks this slow-burning struggle for full control took a twist as Kroenke offered £28,000 per share for the Russian’s stake.

Kroenke owns 67% of Arsenal; Usmanov has a 30.4% stake. The remaining shares belong to minority shareholders, many of whom have preserved a small holding for decades, even passing down the generations. Having two main investors who do not have a working relationship, despite having been on the scene for the past 10 years and who appear to hold one another in low regard, is not a healthy situation. Usmanov has never been able to secure a seat on the board or influence any decisions and both men know this will continue with the current awkwardly cut pieces of the Arsenal cake.

Both parties have tried to force a change. If Kroenke succeeds in his attempt to buy out Usmanov, initially reported by the website Arseblog, it would take his percentage to 97%. It would put him in a position to squeeze out the minority shareholders and presents the risk Arsenal would become a privately owned business.

The consequences of that are troubling for the 130-year-old club. As well as removing any requirement for the publication of accounts or an AGM, the absence of registering the business in the United States, to be based under Kroenke’s KSE umbrella in Delaware, would open up. There would also be no internal barriers to using Arsenal as leverage in deals as the Glazer family did with Manchester United. These board-level manoeuvres have been watched with interest by a consortium of longstanding Arsenal supporters who found heavyweight financial backing and tried to throw their hat into the ring three times during the past year. They made two inquiries to Kroenke at a valuation of £2bn for the club – £32,000 per share – and made a third attempt at a breakthrough in June via an olive branch idea to buy out Usmanov but that was dependent on a seat on the board and collaboration with Kroenke to create a more unified environment around the club. The Missouri-born entrepreneur turned down all three presentations.

An, as well as removing any requirement for the publication of accounts or an AGM, the absence of registering the business in the United States, to be based under Kroenke’s KSE umbrella in Delaware, would open up. There would also be no internal barriers to using Arsenal as leverage in deals as the Glazer family did with Manchester United. The Missouri-born entrepreneur turned down all three presentations.

A spokesman for the consortium, which has been in communication with Kroenke and Usmanov for close to a year, expressed concerns about the situation. “We are owned 97% by two very wealthy individuals but it is a disappointment that they have never managed to get together and see eye to eye to move the club forward. The benefit of their wealth and experience could have been felt in unison but Arsenal has not been able to gain from it.”

Ashley Brown, chief executive of Supporters Direct, sees this as part of a worrying trend. “It is clear that too many clubs are moving in a similar direction, taking fans further away from owners and treating them primarily as businesses.”

The best owners recognise that they are custodians of a football club loved by thousands and operating at the heart of their communities.”
Slovenia on Sunday will take just a point from against Malta - who have finish their campaign second in Group F. Strachan's side a win cross to give Gordon Ikechi Anya's right-wing Morrison.

Out Griffiths and James Berra and also kept save from Christophe Chris Martin hit the Dubravka. Goalkeeper Martin of the woodwork and win by a combination the hosts would be denied Thursday.

Skrtel own goal gave Scotland...........1 Scotland kept their World Cup qualifying hopes alive in dramatic fashion as a late Martin Skrtel own goal gave them victory over 10-man Slovakia on Thursday.

It had looked as though the hosts would be denied a potentially decisive win by a combination of the woodwork and goalkeeper Martin Dubravka.

Leigh Griffiths and Chris Martin hit the crossbar, and Dubravka made an outstanding save from Christophe Berra and also kept out Griffiths and James Morrison.

But Skrtel turned home Ikechi Anya's right-wing cross to give Gordon Morrison.

Outside the box moved slightly in the air but, still, Dubravka, managed to beat it away. Martin then curled a gorgeous shot up and over Dubravka, and here began the cruelty for Scotland. Martin's shot camepping off the crossbar. Five minutes later, Griffiths stood over a free-kick and produced another beauty from his dead-ball repertoire. Like Martin's shot, Dubravka was a beaten man. Like Martin's shot, it came back off the woodwork.

In O'Neill's 50th game in charge, they failed to equal their record of six clean sheets in a row - set in 1986, the last time Northern Ireland qualified for the World Cup.

Germany went into their final group game at home to Azerbaijan on Sunday, having extended their unbeaten run to 18 games since losing 2-0 to France in the semi-finals of Euro 2016. The world champions retain their record of having never lost an away World Cup qualifying game, a run that spans 47 games from March 1934, and they have ever lost two World Cup qualifier fixtures.

Martin O'Neill has agreed a contract extension which will keep him in charge of the Republic of Ireland for the Euro 2020 campaign. The 65-year-old former Aston Villa boss succeeded Giovanni Trapattoni as manager of the Republic in November 2013.

Assistant manager Roy Keane has also extended his deal with the FAI.

“I think there are exciting times ahead for us with some younger players coming through,” said O'Neill.

“I wasn’t sure I would get used to international football, but qualification for the Euros made it all worthwhile.”
Kane seals World Cup spot

Harry Kane’s injury-time winner secured England’s qualification for next summer’s World Cup with victory against Slovenia Thursday night - but this was a display designed to dampen any sense of expectation.

Kane, England captain for the night, bundled in Kyle Walker’s cross for his 11th goal in 22 international appearances to finally break down Slovenia’s resistance as they looked likely to hold out for a point.

It meant manager Gareth Southgate can now start planning in earnest for Russia but could not cover up the cracks in an England performance that was lifeless, uninspired and mediocre.

Marcus Rashford and Raheem Sterling almost broke the deadlock before Kane made his breakthrough, the hosts were also grateful to much-criticised keeper Joe Hart for some crucial interventions.

England and Southgate have achieved their goal.

Kane, England captain for the night, bundled in Kyle Walker’s cross for his 11th goal in 22 international appearances to finally break down Slovenia’s resistance as they looked likely to hold out for a point.

And that was because, for the large part, this was a desperately poor England performance as they struggled to find a way through a well-drilled Slovenia.

England’s poor performance drew mockery and sarcasm from some sections of a dissatisfied Wembley crowd, clearly unimpressed by what they were witnessing.

It was also an atmosphere tempered by the reality of England’s current standing apart from the elite of the international game.

England carry a forward threat in the shape of Kane and Rashford, who will be supplemented by Dele Alli when he is free from suspension, but the glaring lack of creativity elsewhere - especially in central midfield - must represent a real concern for Southgate.
