Best of British: 500,000 step up to help NHS though crisis

■ Spirit of Blitz on full display as volunteer target is doubled within hours of appeal

More than 500,000 people have volunteered to help the NHS through the coronavirus, allowing the health service to triple its original target.

Boris Johnson said "thank you on behalf of the entire country" on Wednesday after the goal of 250,000 volunteers was exceeded in less than a day.

Helpers will next week start aiding 1.5 vulnerable million people being "shielded" through the worst of the outbreak, by delivering medicines, driving them to medical appointments and calling up for regular chats.

Those who volunteer will get online training before being matched with a vulnerable person. People will get "chat prompts" to help them make conversation.

After an appeal on Tuesday, 504,303 had signed up online within 24 hours, leaving health chiefs "blown away". Matt Hancock, the health secretary, announced today that a total of 560,000 members of the public had now signed up.

"That is already - in one day - as many volunteers as the population of Coventry," Mr Johnson said.

"They will driving medicines from pharmacies to patients. They will be bringing patients home from hospital. Very importantly, they'll be making regular phone calls to check on and support people who are staying on their own at home. And they will be absolutely crucial in the fight against this virus."

He added: "To all of you, and to all the former NHS staff who are coming back now into the service. I say thank you on behalf of the entire country."

'how generous'

The health service now hopes to be able to recruit 750,000 volunteers in total and has not set a limit, saying that it will take anyone who wants to help.

Sir Simon Stevens, chief executive of NHS England, said: "Times like this show just how generous the British people are and how much they value our health service: we are blown away by this response.

The NHS is always there for you — now is your time to be there for us

Stephen Powis, NHS national medical director, said: "We are truly amazed by the number of people who want to come and help us in the war against coronavirus . . . you will without a doubt help us to save lives. Our NHS needs you, whether it's by volunteering or simply staying at home, you are helping your families, communities and protecting our NHS."

Volunteers surfaced all over the country, united by a respect for the NHS and a willingness to draw together in a national emergency.

Andrew Fenton, 60, an electrician and plumber who lives near Blackburn, in Lancashire, said that he was grateful to the health service for fixing a smashed shoulder. "I just felt a real desire to do something," he said. "I've never volunteered for anything before, but I'll do anything [for the NHS]."

Chris Whitehead, 31, a recruitment officer from I would volunteer," he Mitcheldean, in the Forest of Dean, felt compelled because of the care it has given to his family.

'best in humanity'

Mr Whitehead, who lives with his wife Natasha and their son Otto, 3, was nine when he lost his father to leukaemia. "I thought this might be coming down the tracks so I made my mind up a couple of days ago that said. "Because my dad had leukaemia I grew up going in and out of hospitals and my nan has been looked after by them."

In London, Newman, 31, a former soldier who has served in Iraq and Afghanistan, simply sees it as his duty in "the war" against Covid-19.

"It feels like going back to serving again really, providing help to those who are less fortunate," he added.

Volunteers can sign up online and will need background checks. The scheme is being coordinated by the Royal Voluntary Service.

Its chief executive, Catherine Johnstone, likened the response to the appeal to the million women who volunteered during the Second World War. "In times like this you can really see the best in humanity," she said.

Those who cough on key workers will be charged

■ Two men in England already convicted

Anyone who coughs on key workers as a threat amid the coronavirus crisis will face serious criminal charges.

The warning from the Director of Public Prosecutions for England and Wales comes after reports of essential workers being coughed at by people claiming they have the virus.

Max Hill QC said he was "appalled" by the incidents and the full force of the law would be used.

Two men in England have already been convicted - one of them jailed.

The warning came as the government announced tough new restrictions on people who breach coronavirus lockdown rules.

'appalled'

Coughs or spits directed at key workers - or threats to do so - can be considered crimes if they were meant to harm or cause fear, with criminals charged with common assault.

In England and Wales, common assault can lead to six months in prison - and attacks against emergency workers going about their duties Darren Rafferty, carry a maximum of Dagenham, sentence of two years. London, pleaded

Mr Hill said: "Emergency workers are more essential than ever as society comes together to tackle the coronavirus pandemic.

"I am therefore appalled by reports of police officers and other frontline workers being deliberately coughed at by people claiming to have Covid-19."

"Let me be very clear: this is a crime and needs to stop. The Crown Prosecution Service stands behind emergency and essential workers and will not hesitate to prosecute anybody who threatens them as they go about their vital duties."

On Tuesday, David Mott, 40, spat at a Lancashire Police sergeant, saying he wanted to give her Covid-19.

Officers had been directing him and others to go home under the government's guidance to stay indoors. Blackburn magistrates jailed him for 26 weeks on Wednesday for the threats and other offences.

Also on Wednesday,

Darren Rafferty, 45, of Dagenham, east London, pleaded guilty to grievous bodily harm against his former partner and three counts of assaulting an emergency worker.

During the incident, Rafferty coughed at Metropolitan Police officers, saying he was infected with Covid-19. He was remanded in custody ahead of sentencing on 1 April.

A 39-year-old man who claimed to have Covid-19 is to appear in court in Belfast on Thursday, after he too allegedly coughed towards two police officers.

'better protection'

John Apter, chair of the Police Federation of England and Wales, which represents rankand-file officers, said he had spoken this week with Home Secretary Priti Patel about such "vile" threats.

"I wanted emergency legislation brought in to offer increased protection for all 999 workers who are being attacked in this way. There are offences already available but they are generally minor and do not attract the level of seriousness they deserve.

UNDER THREAT: attacks against emergency workers going about their duties carry a maximum sentence of two years

"In our campaign to see better protection for 999 workers, I have often been a critic of the sometimes soft sentences dished out to those who assault my colleagues and those from other emergency services. In this time of crisis the comments from Max Hill are welcome and timely."

Jail threat for lockdown flouters

Anyone continuing to break the UK's newcoronavirus lockdown rules will be breaking the law and faces arrest.

People ignoring tougher restrictions on movement could be hit with a £60 fine initially and another for £120 for a second offence.

New powers given to police in England mean no-one will be allowed to leave their home "without reasonable excuse".

The measures come into force on Thursday and will last six months, with a review every three weeks.

To ensure people stay at home and avoid nonessential travel, police will be able to order people to go home, leave an area or disperse.

The new powers mean officers can:

- ensure parents are doing all they can to stop their children breaking the rules
- issue a £60 fixed penalty, lowered to £30 if paid within 14 days
- issue a £120 fixed penalty for second-time offenders, doubling on each further repeat offence
- Anyone who does not pay can be taken to court, with magistrates able to impose unlimited fines.

If they still refuse to comply, police can arrest them.

However, the Home Office, in announcing the new rules, said that "in the first instance, the police will always apply their common sense and discretion."

Under strict measures to fight the coronavirus outbreak announced by Prime Minister Boris Johnson earlier this week, people are only allowed to leave the house for specific reasons:

Shopping for "basic necessities", as infrequently as possible

One form of exercise a day such as a run, walk or cycle

Medical reasons, to provide care, or to help a vulnerable person

Travelling to and from work, but only if it is "absolutely necessary" and cannot be done from home

The measures were introduced on Tuesday and remain in force until April 14th when they will be subject to a review.

Charles tests positive for Coronavirus

The Prince of Wales has tested positive for coronavirus, Clarence House has announced.

Prince Charles, 71, is displaying mild symptoms "but otherwise remains in good health", a spokesman said, adding that the Duchess of Cornwall, 72, has been tested but does not have the virus.

Charles and Camilla are now self-isolating at Balmoral.

Buckingham Palace said the Queen last saw her son, the heir to the throne, on 12 March, but was "in good health".

The palace added that the Duke of Edinburgh was not present at that meeting, and that the Queen was now "following all the appropriate advice with regard to her welfare".

A Clarence House statement read: "In accordance with government and medical advice, the prince and the duchess are now self-isolating at home in Scotland.

"The tests were carried out by the NHS in Aberdeenshire, where they met the criteria required for testing.

"It is not possible to ascertain from whom the prince caught the virus owing to the high number of engagements he carried out in his public role during recent weeks."

The duke and duchess arrived in Scotland on Sunday. Charles had been displaying mild symptoms over the weekend and was tested by the NHS in Aberdeenshire on Monday.

The results came through on Tuesday night, showing he was positive

Charles is still working, is up and about and in good spirits.

The 71-year-old heir to the throne last saw the Queen briefly on the 12 March.

Hopes rise for home coronavirus antibody test

■ 3.5 million set to be ordered within weeks and delivered by Amazon

A home finger-prick test for the coronavirus will be offered to millions of people in the UK and delivered by Amazon if checks this week show that it works.

Those who have been tested could be allowed back to work if they have recovered and the tests show that they are immune, offering Britain a gradual route out of the lockdown.

If evaluation reveals that the test is accurate, NHS staff would be offered it in the next few weeks, with the general population gaining access online and in pharmacies.

On a day of cautious optimism over Britain's response to the coronavirus crisis the government said it believed that the NHS would just about cope after the imposition of social distancing and a rapid increase in the number of intensive care beds.

Chris Whitty, the chief medical officer for England, said that it would be "a close run thing" but added: "We do think that if everybody sticks to staying in your household unless absolutely essential, this gap [between the number of beds and the number of critically ill patients] will probably be manageable by the NHS."

Among the developments on Wednesday:

- The scientist whose models precipitated the tougher measures imposed last week said that the death toll could end up being "substantially lower" than 20,000, with most of the fatalities among those who would have died this year anyway.
- NHS chiefs said that they wanted to start testing frontline staff in separate procedures "within days" to avoid those with minor coughs and fevers having to leave work for up to two weeks.

The NEC in Birmingham and the Manchester Central Convention Complex will be the next venues converted into makeshift hospitals, among 13 sites to be set up across the country.

- The Department for Work and Pensions is redeploying 10,000 staff and recruiting an additional 1,500 to process the surge in benefits cases as a result of the virus.
- Black cab drivers could be asked to act as a transport service for NHS workers.

Boris Johnson has described tests that would show whether people had coronavirus as a "total game-changer", enabling people to know once they were no longer at risk of catching or passing on the virus.

"We are massively ramping up our testing programmes, buying in huge numbers of tests," he said.

The government has ordered 3.5 million testing kits from at least three commercial suppliers. Sharon Peacock, director of the national infection service at Public Health England, told MPs on Wednesday that validation of the kits was due to be completed this week.

The test looks for key markers of the immune response that the body mounts to fight off the virus. The kits can detect them in a droplet drawn the fingertip. "Several million tests have been purchased for use. We need to evaluate them in the laboratory, because these are brand new products, to be clear that they work as they are claimed to," Professor Peacock told the science and technology select committee.

The home test will involve pricking a finger to extract a drop of blood

Dyson gets order for 10,000 ventilators

The government has ordered 10,000 ventilators from Dyson to help deal with the coronavirus crisis.

The firm, headed by inventor Sir James Dyson, said it had designed a new type of ventilator in response to a call on behalf of the NHS.

The order is still subject to the devices passing stringent medical tests but that is expected to happen quickly.

Dyson has had hundreds of engineers working round the clock to design the ventilators from scratch.

It hopes to build the ventilators at scale from its UK base in Wiltshire - using aircraft hangars that were used to stuff parachutes in the World War Two.

It is thought that even if regulatory approval is forthcoming, it could take a couple of weeks to move from prototype to the device being made in significant scale.

In the meantime, the government said that is "picking the lowhanging fruit" by buying as many existing models as it can.

Currently, the NHS has just over 8,000 ventilators, the government thinks it can procure a further 8,000 from existing domestic and international suppliers.

It estimates that the NHS will need at least 30,000 to deal with the potential flood of virus victims.

We are living the movie

with guest columnist Annie McQueen

We're in THAT movie.

The movie where we see disaster all over the world, behind the shoulders of the reporters, the world crashing around them.

Most of us thought 'that could never happen to us'...but it has, minus the zombies. And the most frightening thing? The lack of preparedness. In this country the closure of Obama's pandemic team is most likely to have been a major factor in the US not being prepared, or at the very least it hindered the response. I don't need to go into details now, we're too far in. Everyone knows the drill, or at least should. But personally, I'm on my third week of social distancing. (Meetings and gatherings were being canceled two weeks ago, or was it three? I'm losing track). The studios shut down and my husband came home early from shooting a TV series in Atlanta.

His first concern being the commencement of shooting, mine being the possibility of the virus on his jeans. (He's since, very quickly, come around to the severity of the virus). For a week though, we were on different pages. I was here in LA gently stocking up on food (and admittedly some emergency food like microwave rice) and he was in another state filming, seemingly carrying on regardless.

Feeling alone but not vulnerable (I'm from Sheffield, we don't do vulnerable) I went into survival mode pretty quickly. Not panic mode, let me be clear. Pure survival. Knowing if we have electricity and water we'd be ok for a few months, I made sure to buy only what we needed for two weeks and as I said, some emergency rice (more like a few packets of cheese risotto which I've already eaten, convincing myself that needs must...'). Those two weeks have now passed and I find myself in a situation I'm very unfamiliar with: Uncertainty. I was sure, if we stayed at home for two weeks with cheese risotto and Britbox, it would pass the USA with much less aggression than poor Italy, Iran, China or Spain. But as I sit here writing, the death rate has increased dramatically and the case rate also, here and in UK, with POTUS claiming he's keen for everything to get back to normal asap! (I can't begin to write about his incompetence as a leader nay, human being in general).

Which brings me to good old Blighty. Britannia. Great Britain. I've lived in LA for 12 years and have spent most of that time longing for England, friends and family, but knowing I have to be here for work. However, this past week has, I suppose, shattered my rose tinted spectacles of my beloved UK. With a pandemic weeks no, days away from destroying lives, Brits crammed into pubs, into parks and onto the tube (granted, a restricted service, a ridiculous idea). Sound bites from punters claiming they'd beat the virus if they got it' to others simply not caring about the outcome. When did we become so carefree and selfish? Did our grandparents/ parents fight in wars for us to value life so cheaply? THIS is a war, and our people aren't stepping up to the plate. I'm deeply disappointed in my fellow Brits at home for being so reckless and dare I say, idiotic. Is this the future of Britain? Or are we only being shown the minority to sell papers? (I know wishful thinking).

To everyone who IS following the rules and especially those who acted before being told by BJ, Thank You. Thank You for saving people you'll never meet and for taking the strain off our precious NHS. I'll never give up on the UK, but for now it's definitely in the dog house.

Reach out. Stick together. Stay healthy.

Hello Everyone!

How's this self-isolation got you all feeling? Stircrazy yet?

Of course some people are still working, while a lot of people have lost their jobs or in a state of limbo. I truly feel for you. Depending on what your work situation there is help out there and first on your list should be to see if you qualify for EDD.

Then there are ton of grants out there to help, just ask your old boss or head of Human Resources.

We are definitely feeling the pinch at BRITS IN LA, as we have lost half of our advertisers. But that's not going to stop us from creating content and online events for you. We are talking with Sandro about hosting a virtual pub quiz and this Tuesday we are launching our Brits in LA Brekkie Club from home using Zoom. Find us on Facebook for the link, because it's VITALLY important to feel close to your friends during times like these.

WHO'S ZOOMING WHO?: virtual gatherings are a great way to stay connected

I'm also planning to host a virtual dance party for Monday nights, starting next week so watch out for that.

The fact that 500,000 Brits signed up in just a few hours to volunteer for the NHS this week shows yet again what a kind and generous nation the British are. To make a difference locally, if you yourself need or know of anyone elderly having a hard time with all of this please reach out to us and let us see how we can help.

Shakespeare allegedly wrote some of his finest works while under lockdown during an epidemic. With that in mind I have created a new character called "Colin the Raver" on Instagram (@ colintheraver). Apologies to member so the group called Colin. But he is giving a survivor's guide for these difficult Coronavirus times. He's a

Meet a Member: Alex Kordek

Meet Alex Kordek from Bearsted in Kent, who moved to LA in September 2019 to pursue his dream to work as a creative director & choreographer in LA.

Was there a particular reason you chose LA?

Yes, the main reason was to develop and further my career in the entertainment industry. I've been offered some amazing opportunities here and I'm extremely driven and I wanted to challenge myself, as you only grow as person when you put yourself out of your comfort The second zone. reason was the lovely sunshine and general atmosphere vibrant that I experienced when visiting LA as a tourist.

What do you miss most from home?

I miss my family and friends and M&S of course (ha ha!) But apart from that I don't really miss much - I was ready for a change.

What was your first impression of LA and has it changed since?

My first impression of LA was that it was a bit shabby and scary when I first visited, but that was mainly because I had a bad glamping not easy place to just experience in a sketchy part of Hollywood – lets just say a nightmare accomodation situation that I won't forget. But now my experience of LA is all the glitz and glam – just like the movies!

What do you find the biggest difference is living here versus London?

SPACE! There is so much space in LA and I love to walk around as I have the sidewalks to myself. In London it's more a case of being elbowed off the pavement by lots of crowds.

Do you have a hidden gem in LA that you want to share with us?

Yes! I discovered a place (with a fellow Brits in LA member) called "Friends Street" in the Palisades that leads to the most amazing view over Santa Monica and the ocean, it was such a magical moment and one I will treasure and re-visit.

What would you suggest to others who are thinking about making the move here? your research thoroughly and give yourself lots of time. It's get up and go. Visit as much as you can prior to making the move so you can figure all the aspects out and give yourself plenty of time to plan accommodation. And make sure you get to Brits In LA on Tuesdays I got my best advice from making friends in the group.

Lots of our members join our group Brits in LA seeking out words of wisdom - what is the best piece of advice you've been given?

You never know what's around the corner here. It might take time to settle in LA but keep optimistic and be open minded for every opportunity that can come your way. Be very proactive and on the ball!

Lastly, how can we find out more about you? Are you working on anything at the moment?

I'm currently working some with A-list celebrities preparing them for press shoots, red carpet events and TV interviews. I'm also the creative director/ choreographer for a music video involving a female rapper which is really exciting. We are hoping it will go viral as it's a unique concept and has never been done before! I'm constantly having meetings about new projects and there's a lot of great things lined up for the future, so watch this space.

Please feel free to check out my new US website which has just launched - www.alexkordek.com and also my UK dance & entertainment agency

Pep Guardiola's side face a two year ban from European competition

Eight clubs move to close City's European ban loophole

Eight Premier League lead to City asking have joined clubs together to try to Manchester stop City playing in the Champions League next season if they make a request for their two-year ban from the competition to be frozen during an appeal.

City's hopes of a swift resolution to their legal battle with Uefa have been hit after the Court of Arbitration for Sport (CAS) said that all inperson hearings had been postponed until May 1 because of the coronavirus pandemic. It has been suggested that the delay could CAS to freeze the ban until the case has been heard, which would in theory allow them to compete in next season's competition.

Although City are confident that their appeal will be completed before the start of the next football season, their rivals have taken action to try to prevent them benefiting from a stay of execution.

If City's ban is upheld, whoever finishes fifth in the Premier League will qualify for the Champions League. Manchester United occupy that place as it stands, two points ahead Wolverhampton Wanderers and Sheffield United, who are the only top-ten club other than City not to contact the CAS. Those that have include Liverpool, Chelsea, Arsenal and Tottenham Hotspur.

It is a similar situation to when Fiorentina and Atalanta supported a European ban for Milan over financial fair play breaches in 2018 as it would have meant Atalanta avoided the Champions League qualifying rounds and bumped up Fiorentina from the Europa League slot. However, CAS overturned Milan's twoyear ban on appeal.
