

Coronavirus vaccine trial begins in Oxford

The first human trial in Europe of a coronavirus vaccine has begun in Oxford.

Two volunteers were injected on Thursday, the first of more than 800 people recruited for the study.

Half will receive the Covid-19 vaccine, and half a control vaccine which protects against meningitis but not coronavirus.

The design of the trial means volunteers will not know which vaccine they are getting, though doctors will.

Elisa Granato, one of the two who received the jab, said: “I’m a scientist, so I wanted to try to support the scientific process wherever I can.”

The vaccine was developed in under three months by a team at Oxford University. Sarah Gilbert, professor of vaccinology at the Jenner Institute, led the pre-clinical research.

“Personally I have a high degree of confidence in this vaccine,” she said.

“Of course, we have to test it and get data from humans. We have to demonstrate it actually works and stops people getting infected with coronavirus before using the vaccine in the wider population.”

Prof Gilbert previously said she was “80% confident” the vaccine would work, but now prefers not to put a figure on it, saying simply she is “very optimistic” about its chances.

The vaccine is made from a weakened version of a common cold virus (known as an adenovirus) from chimpanzees that has been modified so it cannot grow in humans.

safety trials

Health Secretary Matt Hancock announced £20 million in funding to speed the testing through larger-scale human trials over the summer, as well as £22.5 million for a parallel vaccine project at Imperial College London.

There are more than

HIGH HOPES: Oxford University is confident its vaccine will be ready by September 100 vaccine projects in development around the world, only a few of which are starting human trials. Last month teams in China and the US both injected the first people, putting them about four weeks ahead of the Oxford team.

After the initial safety trials come larger efficacy tests, in which the drug is given to thousands of people to see if they are protected from infection. Whether a vaccine can be developed before the end of the year will depend on the speed of the trials and whether it can be made at scale.

Ordinarily, manufacturers wait for a vaccine to be proved successful before producing it. With the doses required for any coronavirus vaccine, that could mean months lost.

Speaking at a press conference, Mr Hancock confirmed that manufacturing investment would be running in parallel. “If either of these vaccines safely works, then we can make it available as soon as humanly possible,” he said. “After all, the upside of being the first country in the world to develop a successful vaccine is so huge that I am throwing everything at it.”

Gilbert, an Oxford University professor of vaccinology, said that to get to this stage her team had compressed five years of work into four months. She added: “It’s not just for this country, we need to make a vaccine for the world.”

The vaccine that she and her colleagues at the Jenner Institute have developed uses a harmless virus to carry part of the coronavirus’s genetic material. In the body this induces cells to produce proteins identical to those on the surface of the coronavirus so training the immune system to spot them.

Oxford hopes to have the drug ready by autumn if the trials are a success. “The prospects are very good,” Professor Gilbert said, “but it’s not certain.”

News From Britain

NHS soon to reopen for routine care as virus passes peak

The NHS will reopen "within very short order" for routine care, the health secretary said on Wednesday amid warnings that 60,000 cancer patients could die through lack of treatment or diagnosis.

Matt Hancock told the Commons that the coronavirus peak had been reached and that hospitals again had the capacity to attend to victims of cancer, heart attacks and strokes. Routine surgery would resume shortly, with the NHS having 10,000 free beds and with the outbreak no longer worsening, he said.

On Wednesday 759 further coronavirus deaths were reported in hospitals, taking the total to 18,100.

Mr Hancock declared victory in the battle to stop the health service being overwhelmed. He said there were 3,000 intensive care beds available, three times more than at the start of the outbreak even before counting the temporary Nightingale hospitals. "Within very short order we will start to restart the NHS," he said.

Senior doctors are increasingly worried about the potentially deadly fallout from the lockdown and efforts to free up NHS beds to treat coronavirus patients. Cancer Research UK has estimated that more than 2,000 cancer cases a week are being missed because GP referrals are down by three quarters.

Karol Sikora, chief medical officer of Rutherford Cancer Centres, told ITV that up to 60,000 cancer patients could die because of lack of treatment or diagnosis.

"It's absolutely right to stop the treatment for some cancers in the face of coronavirus. But for others, a delay of more than a month would have a negative impact on the future prognosis," he said.

Mr Hancock said he wanted to "emphasise that people with non-coronavirus symptoms must still contact their GP. If you are told to go to hospital, the place you need to be is in hospital."

Pregnant women and parents of young children must also seek help because "non-Covid NHS services are open for patients. The NHS is there for you if you need advice and treatment."

Hospitals have been told to cancel all non-urgent operations but Mr Hancock said that with demand for coronavirus care no longer rising, "we will gradually reopen the rest of the NHS to non-life-threatening elective surgery as soon it is safe to do so".

He cautioned that he could not "give the guarantee that all cancer treatment can go ahead"; in some instances, it would be "clinically inadvisable".

Derek Alderson, president of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, said: "Some cancer operations have been cancelled as a twofold measure: to allow further capacity for Covid-19 patients but to also to keep cancer patients away from hospital, so they are at less risk of catching Covid-19."

"There are, of course, some cancer operations which will need to be prioritised sooner, and the recent guidance from NHS England will help clinicians to ensure that they are. We are working with government to establish Covid-free centres where some cancer treatment can take place with minimal risk of infection."

MATT HANCOCK: "If you are told to go to hospital, the place you need to be is in hospital."

Army of thousands coming to help trace coronavirus victims

■ Key move for easing social distancing promised within weeks as Britain reaches infection peak

An army of thousands of coronavirus contact tracers is to be trained within weeks to help Britain exit lockdown.

Council staff and civil servants are among those who will be drafted in as part of a three-tier system to ensure that every infected person is isolated before they pass the virus on to others.

Public Health England aims to have a system running within three weeks so that it can be used if the government wants to ease restrictions.

As he declared on Wednesday that Britain had "reached the peak" of coronavirus cases, Matt Hancock, the health secretary, promised "very large scale" contact tracing would be in place to allow social distancing to be relaxed.

John Newton, the government's testing chief, said today that it would have the capacity to meet Mr Hancock's target of testing 100,000 people a day by the end of next week.

He told IIV's Peston that progress so far was "ahead of target" and that there would "certainly" be the capacity for that number of tests before May. "There will be a lot more access for a lot more people quite soon," he said.

Asian countries such as South Korea and Singapore have kept outbreaks under control and minimized deaths through intensive tracing of the movements of those shown to be infected, with those who have come into close contact ordered to self-isolate.

Britain abandoned mass contact tracing a month ago as testing capacity failed to keep up with the epidemic.

The aim would be to track more than 80 per cent of people with whom an infected person had been in contact within 24 hours of diagnosis. Infected people and those they had contact with would be quarantined until the risk that they could get the illness had passed.

The plan emerged as:

- The chief medical officer warned that some social distancing would last the rest of the year and the World Health Organisation said that "the virus will be with us for a long time".

- A national "antibody census" will test 300,000 people over the next year to build up a picture of how the virus has spread through Britain.

- Hospitals have been admonished for stockpiling supplies as it was revealed that the NHS needs up to 60 million masks a week for frontline workers.

- Parliament hosted the first partly virtual prime minister's questions in a sitting largely free of technical glitches.

Mr Hancock told MPs: "As we bring the number of new cases down so we will introduce contact tracing at large scale . . . Our goal is to get to a point where we can test, track and trace everybody who needs it."

Borrowing set to soar to record levels

The UK's budget deficit is set to see "an absolutely colossal increase to a level not seen in peacetime", the director of the Institute for Fiscal Studies has said.

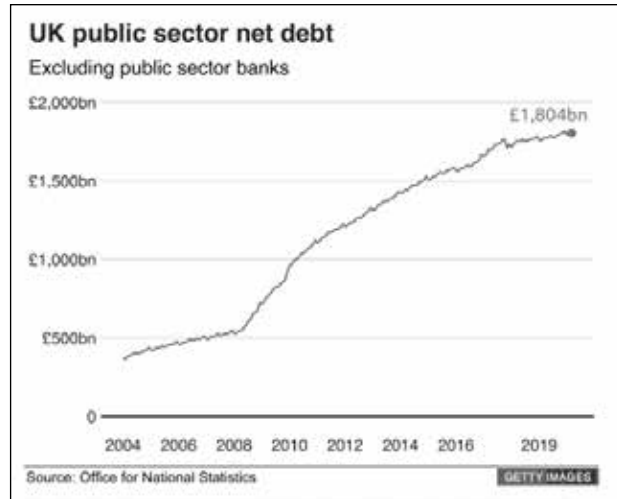

The economic impact of coronavirus was likely to push the deficit to as high as £260bn, Paul Johnson told the BBC.

He was speaking on Thursday after latest figures showed that the deficit hit £48.7bn in the 2019-20 financial year.

But Mr Johnson said those figures were "the numbers before the storm".

And, separately, one of the Bank of England's top policymakers has warned that the UK faces its worst economic shock in several hundred years.

Jan Vlieghe, a member of the BoE's interest-rate setting committee, said that "early indicators" suggest the UK was "experiencing an economic contraction that is faster and deeper than anything we have seen in the past century, or possibly several centuries".

He did, though, say there was "in principle" a good chance that the UK would return to its "pre-virus trajectory once the pandemic is over".

The UK's deficit last year - the gap between the government's income and its expenditure - was £9.3bn higher than in the 2018-19 financial year and equivalent to 2.2% of GDP.

The Office for National Statistics, which released those figures, said they did not capture the big spending announced by the government to cope with the virus.

"The coronavirus (Covid-19) pandemic is expected to have a significant impact on the UK public sector finances," it added.

"These effects will arise from both the introduction of public health measures and from new government policies to support businesses and individuals."

Tax rises

The ONS said the full effects of coronavirus on the public finances would become clearer in the coming months.

Mr Johnson told the BBC's Today programme that there was still "a huge amount of uncertainty" surrounding the economic impact of the virus.

However, the government had announced tax cuts and spending increases worth £100bn, so the effect was "likely to dwarf the record that we saw during the financial crisis".

Mr Johnson said the economy was unlikely to recover quickly afterwards and would remain "smaller than it otherwise would have been". He added that tax rises and a growing deficit were the likely outcome.

"I would be astonished if in a couple of years the economy was back where it would have been if it [the virus] had never happened," he said.

Meanwhile, a closely watched survey of UK businesses has indicated that the economic impact has been even worse than feared.

The IHS Markit/CIPS flash UK composite purchasing managers' index (PMI), which measures activity in the services and manufacturing sectors, fell to a new record low of 12.9 in April, down from 36 in March.

Any reading below 50 indicates contraction. Economists polled by Reuters had expected a figure of 31.4.

Pandemic has brought Britain and China closer, Beijing ambassador Liu Xiaoming claims

The coronavirus pandemic has brought Britain and China closer together, Beijing's ambassador to London claimed on Thursday.

Liu Xiaoming hailed the unprecedented dialogue and "very close work" between the two countries on finding a vaccine.

His comments came amid warnings that Britain should rethink the relationship in the light of issues raised by the pandemic, in particular the reliance on Chinese technology.

"China and the UK are working very closely on a vaccine," Mr Liu claimed in a webinar with the think tank Asia House. "Our two countries are sharing information and experience, conducting joint scientific research . . . President Xi and Boris Johnson expressed support for the scientists of the two countries to work together on this very important area."

Each country's search for a vaccine is separate but Mr Liu hailed co-operation during the pandemic as the model for a relationship.

"In the matter of one month, President Xi and Boris Johnson have had two telephone conversations," he said.

Dominic Raab, the foreign secretary, was also in close contact with his Chinese counterpart, as was Mark Sedwill, the cabinet secretary and national security adviser. Matt Hancock, the health secretary, held his most recent discussions with his Chinese counterpart on Wednesday, he said.

"I've been here as ambassador for more than ten years and I've never seen our top leaders have such intensive communications in such a short time," Mr Liu said. "I am confident that China and the UK will emerge from this test with a more mature and robust relationship."

Technology such as the video-conferencing platform Zoom, on which businesses and individuals are increasingly relying, would improve considerably once Huawei's 5G installation in Britain was complete, he said.

"Once you have Huawei participating in Liu Xiaoming said that China and Britain were sharing information and experience in the search for a coronavirus vaccine this online technology the speed and quality of these meetings will be even better," he said. "I know Prime Minister Johnson has a very ambitious plan to have full coverage of the UK by 2025 in 5G. Huawei will be a big help in this."

Britain's decision to allow Huawei a role in the network has frayed relations with Washington, which has lobbied for the Chinese telecoms company to be dropped. Since the pandemic, the Trump administration has launched a diplomatic and PR offensive against China, blaming Beijing for the spread of the virus and cutting off funds to the World Health Organisation.

Mr Liu hailed Beijing's decision to give a further $30 million to the WHO, replacing the funding shortfall left by Washington, and suggested that London and Beijing were natural partners in the strengthening of the multilateral institution that President Trump is abandoning.

How The World Turned Upside Down....

In just a few short weeks how everything changed, from waking up to the beautiful sunshine with a blue-sky backdrop and palm tree filled horizon, and with that feeling of joy and happiness, so lucky to be 'living the dream'...to a real fear; of the unknown, keeping safe and of course keeping financially afloat.

In a second the rug was pulled and although those beautiful surroundings have not changed, our mindsets truly have. As we watch the news avidly in both the US and the UK we are all on shaky ground, not knowing quite what to do. For us personally we have spent the last few years growing our property development business and (like most of us Brits) worked tirelessly to build a solid business in real estate, working 'hands on' seven days a week for months on end. The timing was lousy, as we were adding the final touches to our newest and biggest project to date in Tarzana when news of the virus hit. This was also the first project with our new 'property partner' a Grammy award-winning producer whose artists and albums hugely influenced us in our long careers in the music and TV industry way back in the day in England. That in itself was a 'pinch yourself moment' but that is LA though, anything is possible... however that is a thread for another day!

For us personally this has been a challenging time deciding what to do about listing the property. Thankfully real estate and the construction industry are both deemed an 'essential business'. However, as no gatherings are permitted and the stay at home order was announced, it means that open houses are strictly off limits and although private viewings are technically allowed observing social distancing practices, not many people are really up for coming out to look at houses. We took a chance and listed the property with as much marketing material as possible to showcase the house on-line so buyers could at least get a real sense of the property and life style without leaving their homes. Our realtor agent put together a good website with an excellent video and we adjusted our initial price expectation to accommodate the ever-changing situation. We launched and now we wait and see.

Speaking with real estate agents it seems that the whole business is in a state of flux, no one really knows how the housing market will be affected long term. It was a buoyant market pre-COVID19 with a relatively low inventory, many serious buyers and multiple offers. How long will the strict lockdown remain in place? What are the serious financial implications moving forward into next year? We acknowledge how hard it is for everyone, we are all in the same boat and that holds some comfort and in our expat British community feel we are pulling closer than ever together to weather the storm. I love all the posts on the Brits in LA Facebook page and feel we are all helping each other through this uncertainty. The great British spirit truly feels like it is here with us across the pond.

Personally, we try to remain positive, that is all we can do right now. We are so proud of what we have achieved in the last few years and in a true Brit networking fashion we are unashamedly brazen in asking our community to please help spread the word. Once this is all over we will host a Brits in LA poolside breakfast to show our sincere thanks and gratitude to our wonderful community. In the meantime, please keep well, keep safe and keep socially distant. See you on the other side!

Meet a Member: Nigel Daly

Meet Nigel Daly OBE from Primrose Hill, London, who moved to LA 17 years ago.....'in search of something new'.

Was there a particular reason you chose LA?

I was given the opportunity to move here with the film journal Screen International. At the time my wife and I were also making films, (so) it seemed a good opportunity to try out Hollywood. There was an option to return after a year if it didn't work out. We put our entire life in a storage unit, packed a few boxes and boarded a plane with our two toddlers. It was all about adventure. We had no idea what we were really doing! I opened that storage unit two years ago and pretty much got rid of everything!

What do you miss most from home?

My family, friends and the British sense of humor. I miss the diversity of culture in London, the theatre and the arts, the history. I also miss the seasons would you believe!

What was your first impression of LA and has it changed since?

I was excited. It had a real sense of energy and youthful vitality...it was also very sexy!

What do you find the biggest difference is living here versus Primrose Hill?

I miss walking. I miss bumping into people literally. I miss the pub culture, I love the moment you walk into a place like The French House in Soho and there is a momentary pause as you survey the crowd and the crowd surveys you and then the adventure begins.

The weekends feel more precious there, as do bank holidays. Friday night for example everyone heads to the pubs and clubs in celebration of their freedom! You don't get that here, the working culture is completely different. I miss that weird feeling of excitement weekends and holidays bring.

Do you have a hidden gem in LA that you want to share with us?

Martinis at Musso and Franks although since "Once Upon A Time in Hollywood" it's impossible to get a seat. I love a martini in the Sunset Towers too. Walking around the lake at the Self Realization Fellowship Lake...the gardens are exceptional and it's so peaceful. Although impossible to get a martini.

What would you suggest to others who are thinking about making the move here?

Be sure to get a credit card and build credit. You need it for everything, apartments, cars, etc. Have someone explain how healthcare works and if you find out let me know. But above all dig in deep, LA has so much to offer. Love it and it will love you back, hate it and it will spit you out!

Lots of our members join our group Brits in LA seeking out words of wisdom - what is the best piece of advice you've been given?

Fortune favors the bold. I live by this mantra.

Lastly, how can we find out more about you?

Buy me a martini at Sunset Towers and I will tell you everything. But for now, check out BRITWEEK at www.britweek.org. We go online April 25th with a week of amazing events. Pour yourself a cocktail (we will be showing you some recipes with a few fun short films) sit back and enjoy amazing ballet, theatre, conversations, libations and more...we have three world premieres and lots of wonderful surprises. It's such a diverse program and as BRITWEEK's new chairman I am really excited and grateful to all who have helped make it happen. Especially Nigel Lythgoe the founder of BRITWEEK and my darling wife Louise Salter, who through her arts organization The Laboratory has really been a massive help in shaping the program. I also help her run The Laboratory Arts Collective which is a wonderful enterprise that creates events, films and two beautiful collectible magazines a year, along with weekly offerings and surprises for its 6000 members across the world. Go to www.thelabmag.com And then there is my day job of course, as President of Screen International. There's so much more to tell you... we need to pull up a stool and order!

Brits in LA Pub Quiz - 'Zoom' over for some fun - every Tuesday

The reviews are in and Brits in LA Virtual Pub Quiz is being called "the entertainment highlight of the week" and "the one thing to look forward to in lockdown."

A surging number of players are discovering and delighting in the fun Tuesday night trivia game humorously hosted on Zoom by quizmaster Sandro Monetti (right) and so ably assisted by Craig Young.

The April 21 game featured brainteasing questions, a group singalong of Monty Python's Always Look on the Bright Side of Life and a toast to the Queen.

Matt and Jo were the latest winners of the first prize, a $40 gift certificate from sponsors The Cat and Fiddle, and continued the streak of different winners each time.

Join the smiling faces at 7.45pm next Tuesday, April 28, on Zoom ID 960 556 148 and if you order takeout or curbside treats from the Cat and Fiddle that day mention "trivia" to get free gifts from Golden Road Brewery.

KEEP YOUR EYES ON THE ROAD AHEAD. YOU'RE HEADING IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION!

ARIES: Take time out to spend time looking at how you can improve the future of your finances. You should be also focusing on a healthy way of life ahead.
TAURUS: Your boss planet Venus is in airy Gemini. Do not be vague how you plan your overall future. Find one area you must improve and work on it. Happy Birthday!
GEMINI: You have the money-loving planet Venus in your life currently. You should be prepared for a slowdown more in the area of cashflow. This is inevitable now but not forever.
CANCER: You are usually cool on your own, however by the midweek ahead do make an effort to contact others socially, this will at least recharge your batteries.
LEO: You have probably had some kind of health challenges recently and it's probably emotional. Whether it's you or another close to you, be prepared with time for resting and relaxing.
VIRGO: With unpredictable Uranus in your cousin sign of Taurus it's best to have a back up plan ready for situations you did not expect. Try to not worry!
LIBRA: Venus your boss planet is in friendly but unpredictable Gemini. Make sure you share any intuitive insights with those folks who are always there for you.
SCORPIO: You are extra emotional and maybe even a bit paranoid. This is bringing up some intense and emotional feelings sometimes. Be still and know you will get through this intact.
SAGITTARIUS: Be your own friend and honor your gut feelings. Your boss Jupiter in your area of communications will bring some truly positive revelations - probably in your dreams.
CAPRICORN: Family and other responsibilities have made you somewhat drained. Spend some time these next few days resting. By next week new work opportunities will turn up.
AQUARIUS: This unpredictable time should not stop you from looking forward to future family gatherings. Indeed anticipating a better future will help you get through the current times.
PISCES: You are likely feeling anxious, although this is a difficult time frame you are not alone. Do not allow anything to stop you planning ahead. The future is on it's way!

Health & Wellness

For immune health... keep glued to that six-channel TV!

THE CURRENT Covid-19 crisis has most of us concerned about the state of our immune systems.

Here at The BodyCamp we've always prioritized health and to help you through this difficult time try this simple visualization to keep your immune system at its strongest!

Ready? Imagine your immune system is a British TV in the 1980s! You may remember in those far-off days there were only four channels, BBC 1 & 2, ITV and Channel Four. It certainly made it simpler to decide what to watch. But I'm going to be generous and give you six channels – try to watch them all closely!

Channel 1: Positive self talk and thoughts.

It is vital that we understand that thoughts, feelings and behaviors affect everything and create all our habits in life. When we begin to tune in to these, we can quickly learn to become mindful of all our thoughts and turn them into more positive states of mind. We can 'think' our immune system into a healthy place and also affect it by thinking negatively – it's our choice.

Channel 2: Breathing.

The simple act of respiration is hugely influential in creating a healthy immune system. With simple relaxation, we can all stay calm and be in a more relaxed place by simply taking control of our breath. We can also improve lung capacity by focusing on breathing. A ten-minute morning meditation is an excellent place to start and you can tap into that a minute at a time during the day whenever you start to feel stressed.

Channel 3: Nutrition.

This channel not only affects the immune system but also our mood. By reducing processed foods, increasing our consumption of plant-based foods and natural foods, the body creates healthier skin and stronger tissue.

Channel 4: Water.

A daily intake of water increases the immune system's capacity to flush out toxins that enter the body and increase hydration for better performance and concentration levels, which are critical for brain function.

Channel 5: Movement.

When we exercise we not only test the immune system but strengthen it due to the 'expand by demand' principle. This means the more we challenge the body to move, the more the muscles, heart, skeletal system and immune system have to simply react, adapt and improve.

Channel 6: Rest and recovery.

When we sleep, meditate, practice yoga or just relax, we enable the immune system to restore and rejuvenate itself. This is especially important for people with busy lifestyles and responsibilities.

So those are the six channels to keep your immune system operating at peak level.

Try to keep them in mind, incorporate them into your daily routine and be sure to focus on all of them for best results. Happy viewing!
