

UK 'past the peak'

■ PM gives upbeat assessment and promises plan to end lockdown

The UK is past the peak of its coronavirus epidemic, Boris Johnson has declared as he promised to publish a road map out of the lockdown next week.

The "comprehensive plan" will address how to get the economy moving again, how people can safely travel to work and how children can get back to school, he said.

Mr Johnson said the government would change its advice on face coverings partly to give people confidence as the country starts its journey out of a lockdown.

He denied that he would seek to repair the massive damage to public finances caused by efforts to contain the infection with another dose of austerity.

In his first appearance at the daily Downing Street briefing since recovering from Covid-19, an occasionally breathless prime minister said the nation had avoided a catastrophic first phase of the epidemic.

"It is thanks to that massive collective effort to shield the NHS that we avoided an uncontrollable and catastrophic epidemic where the reasonable worst-case scenario was 500,000 deaths," he said.

"I can confirm today that for the first time we are past the peak of this disease. We are past the peak and on the downward slope."

Although he stressed that it was vital to avoid letting the infection get out of control, he promised to give more details of how the country could start to return to work and school while keeping social distancing rules in place.

"I will be setting out a comprehensive plan next week to explain how we can get our economy moving, our children back to school and into childcare, and thirdly how we can travel to work and make life in the workplace safer," he said.

"In short, how we can continue to suppress the disease and at the same time restart the economy."

However, the prime minister cautioned that the timing around easing each individual restriction would depend on "where we are in the epidemic" and what the data suggests.

He told reporters: "What you are going to get next week is really a road map, a menu of options."

"The dates and times of each individual measure will be very much driven by where we are in the epidemic, what the data is really saying, and we are getting in a lot more data every day now and in the course of the next few days."

Questioned over whether this map would prompt a change to the official advice that does not recommend masks for shoppers and commuters, Mr Johnson indicated that the government would say there was some benefit to "face coverings".

"What I think Sage [the scientific advisory group] is saying, and what I certainly agree with, is that as part of coming out of the lockdown, I do think that face coverings will be useful both for epidemiological reasons but also for giving people confidence they can go back to work," he said.

There has been some concern that individuals may be overly cautious about returning to work when measures are eased, after weeks of strong messaging from the government.

Experts have argued that face coverings are unlikely to prevent an individual from contracting the virus, but may reduce the spread of Covid-19 from infected people who are not showing symptoms.

Nicola Sturgeon, the Scottish first minister, has already recommended that people in Scotland wear coverings in places where staying two metres apart is challenging, such as in shops and on public transport.

However, Sir Patrick Vallance, the chief scientific adviser, has said there is only "quite weak" evidence to show that masks help to prevent transmission.

Concerns have also been raised that strong public uptake of masks could deprive the NHS and other essential workers from having the protective equipment they need.

Michael Gove, the Cabinet Office minister, said on Wednesday that the government was anxious that people may act in a "cavalier" way if told to wear masks.

PM delays leave after arrival of latest baby

Boris Johnson will delay taking paternity leave until later this year to deal with the coronavirus pandemic after becoming a father again on Wednesday at the age of 55.

Downing Street announced that the prime minister's fiancée, Carrie Symonds, 32, had given birth to a son just three days after Mr Johnson returned to work after his recuperation from Covid-19.

It is understood that Mr Johnson was present throughout the delivery before returning to work in Downing Street.

A spokesman said that both mother and baby were doing well, but declined to provide further details or to say whether Ms Symonds and the baby were still in hospital. Mr Johnson, he added, would not take his two-week statutory paternity leave until later in the year as ministers continue to grapple with the response to the virus.

The couple plan to continue living in the flat above No 11 Downing Street which they have used since Mr Johnson became prime minister nine months ago. The baby was apparently conceived within a week of him taking up the role.

The new arrival was welcomed by political allies and opponents. Rishi Sunak, the chancellor, said it was "great to hear Downing Street is getting a new resident" while Sir Keir Starmer, the Labour leader, described it as "wonderful news".

The Queen sent her good wishes while David Cameron, the last prime minister to become a father in Downing Street, said: "Sam and I are thrilled for you both! Sorry we didn't leave the cot - but the climbing frame should still be in the garden!"

The Archbishop of Canterbury tweeted: "Wishing them every blessing and happiness."

A spokeswoman said: "The prime minister and Ms Symonds are thrilled to announce the birth of a healthy baby boy at a London hospital earlier this morning."

She added: "The PM and Ms Symonds would like to thank the fantastic NHS maternity team."

Ms Symonds announced her pregnancy in an Instagram post in February and said that the baby was due in the "early summer", which suggests that his arrival may have been earlier than expected. Downing Street refused to say whether that was the case.

No 7 at No 10: Carrie Symonds and Boris Johnson

The birth comes after an extraordinary month for the couple, both of whom fell ill with coronavirus. Mr Johnson spent a week in hospital, including three days in intensive care, while Ms Symonds was also briefly bedridden with symptoms of Covid-19, but made a full recovery. After periods in self-isolation they were reunited on April 12 at Chequers where Mr Johnson was recuperating.

Mr Johnson has four adult children with his second wife, Marina Wheeler, QC; they divorced this year. He also has a fifth child after an affair with Helen Macintyre, an art consultant.

Ms Symonds previously worked as director of communications for the Conservative Party. The couple became engaged while holidaying on the Caribbean island of Mustique. If they marry while he is in office, he will be the first prime minister to do so in about 200 years.

Mr Johnson is the third British prime minister in recent years to have had a child while in office, after Tony Blair and Mr Cameron.

Country edges closer to 100,000 test goal

More than 81,600 tests for coronavirus were carried out on more than 54,000 people on Wednesday, marking a significant move towards the government's target of 100,000 a day by the end of April.

Boris Johnson revealed that there had been a huge jump of 30,000 tests in the previous 24 hours, but it will not be clear whether ministers have met their goal until later on Friday.

Earlier, the justice secretary, Robert Buckland, had conceded the government was likely to miss its deadline, as only 52,000 tests had been carried out on Tuesday.

"Even if we don't hit it, we will in the next few days hit that target. We are up to 52,000 being tested, capacity is rising and I think it was right to set an ambitious target. Sometimes if you don't hit a target on the due date, the direction of travel is the most important thing. And I believe we are going to get there and move beyond it because we need more," he told Sky News.

However, the jump of almost 30,000 more tests in 24 hours suggested the government was potentially in touching distance of meeting the target after all.

Johnson said 81,611 tests had been carried out on Wednesday, although only 54,575 individuals were tested because of the number of repeated tests on the same people. Testing capacity stood at around 90,000.

There has been suspicion that the government may try to claim that reaching 100,000 capacity for tests as a victory on Friday, even if the testing goal itself is missed. The number of daily tests may also be inflated by the fact that it includes tests sent out in the post, rather than tests actually completed with results.

The deadline was set by Matt Hancock, the health secretary, on 2 April as the government came under pressure over low testing levels. At that point, there was capacity for 12,799 daily tests in England, with just over 10,650 tests carried out.

Care home figures prompt surge in death toll

■ Retirement homes now “the true front line” in the struggle against coronavirus.

CARE HOMES in the UK have emerged as the front line in the coronavirus battle with new figures suggesting almost 25% of deaths have occurred in the facilities.

The Office for National Statistics data included care home deaths for the first time this week, resulting a 4,000 surge of fatalities between Tuesday and Wednesday.

Health Secretary Matt Hancock said testing will be expanded to all care home residents and staff in England.

This includes those who do not have symptoms, Mr Hancock told Tuesday's coronavirus briefing.

“Building on successful pilots, we will be rolling out testing of asymptomatic residents and staff in care homes in England, and to patients and staff in the NHS,” Mr Hancock said.

All those over 65 and people who must leave home for work will also be able to get a test if they are displaying symptoms.

The health secretary also announced that the government would begin including the number of deaths in care homes and the community in its daily figures from Wednesday, in an effort to “bring as much transparency as possible” to the data.

Until now, the figures have only included hospital deaths.

Coronavirus deaths in hospitals across the UK have reached 21,678 - a rise of 586 from the day before - having peaked on 8 April.

However, projections for care home deaths up to 24 April suggest the numbers have continued to rise.

Another 630 deaths in care homes in Northern Ireland and Scotland have been linked with coronavirus up until mid-April.

Nearly half of coronavirus deaths in those countries are now in care homes.

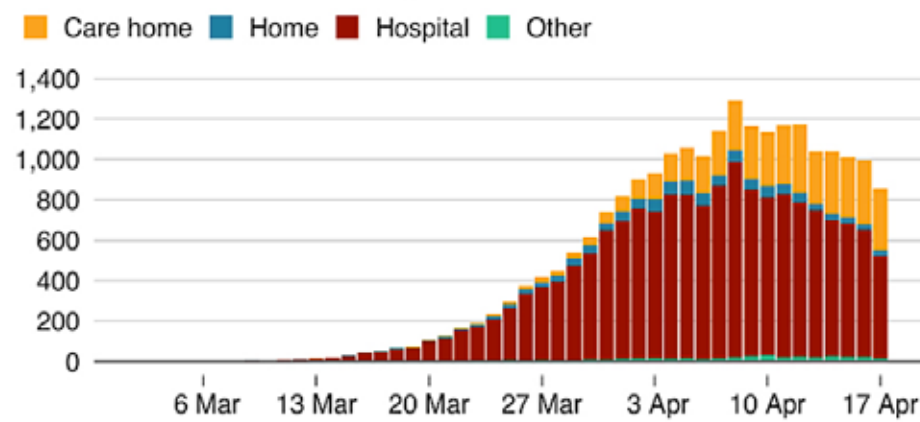

‘True front line’

Mike Padgham, of the Independent Care Group, which represents care homes, said they were now the “true front line” in the fight against coronavirus.

He said: “It is taking a terrible toll. These are our loved ones - mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles and friends who have been taken from us early.”

Coronavirus deaths falling in hospitals but rising in care homes

Daily coronavirus deaths registered in England and Wales

Asked at the coronavirus briefing whether care homes were now the government's priority in dealing with the disease, Mr Hancock said: “Care homes have been a top priority right from the start.

“We've strengthened the rules around what happens in care homes and tightened infection control, also making testing available throughout the care sector.”

Prof John Newton, co-ordinator of the national testing effort, addressing the spread of the virus in care homes, said: “We've done some intensive studies of infection in care homes.

“The presence of symptoms was not really a good marker in the care home setting, both among residents and staff, for the presence of the virus.

“There were significant numbers who were asymptomatic who had the virus and so we have massively increased the amount of testing available.”

Sturgeon warns against quick lifting of lockdown

It is “too early” to start lifting coronavirus lockdown restrictions “in any meaningful way”, Nicola Sturgeon has said.

The next review of strict social distancing rules is due on 7 May.

But the Scottish first minister said the margins for making any changes were still “very, very tight”.

Ministers are considering ways of gradually lifting the lockdown, but Ms Sturgeon warned that it “is not going to be a flick of the switch moment”.

She said the key objective was to “get the virus to as low a level as possible” and then keep it there with continued social distancing and a testing and isolation regime.

Prime Minister Boris

Johnson is due to set out the UK government's thinking on options for easing restrictions in future, after Ms Sturgeon's government published a paper on the same topic.

However, at her daily briefing the first minister said she had to deliver a “tough message” that changes will not happen quickly.

She said: “I have to be straight with you that it may very well be too early in any meaningful way to safely lift any of the current restrictions.

“We have worked very hard to bring down the transmission rate of the virus and we are definitely seeing results from those efforts.

“But our progress against the virus is too fragile for us to let up.”

Ms Sturgeon said there was evidence that people were beginning to venture out more, warning that “if everyone starts easing off, the virus will quickly take off again”.

She said car travel - while still far lower than pre-lockdown levels - had increased by 5%, and by 10% in some towns and cities. Uses of concessionary bus travel was up by almost a sixth last week.

The first minister said she understood people wanted to travel more and spend more time outside, but said “all of it adds up”.

She said: “What I'm asking you to do is to think about whether or not it is the case that right now you are a little more active than you were at the start of lockdown, and why that is the case.”

She asked people think about whether their journeys were essential and added: “If we allow this virus to run out of control again, I'm going to be standing here for a lot longer giving you even more grim statistics.”

Ms Sturgeon has pledged that next week she will update her government's paper with more detailed options on how to begin easing restrictions.

She has said the country could return to something like the previous “containment” phase of dealing with the virus, which would involve a “test, trace, isolate” system of tracking down people who have come into contact with infectious patients and have them go into isolation.

She told ITV's Peston programme: “It stands to reason you have to protect your NHS from being overwhelmed, which is why we've said all along protecting the NHS is an objective, but its not a sufficient objective in and of itself.”

NHS appeal tops £32m as Captain Tom turns 100

War veteran hails British public

The appeal by NHS fundraiser Captain Tom Moore topped £32m as he celebrated his 100th birthday.

The war veteran, who raised the money by walking laps of his garden, has also been made an honorary colonel.

The occasion was also marked with an RAF flypast and birthday greetings from the Queen and prime minister.

With celebrations under way, Capt Tom said everyone who donated was "magnificent" as the fund reached £30m on Thursday morning.

Head of the Army, General Sir Mark Carleton-Smith, called Capt Tom "an inspirational role model".

Capt Tom said it was "extraordinary" to be turning 100, especially with "this many well-wishers".

Capt Tom was spending most of the day self-isolating with his daughter Hannah Ingram-Moore and her family at his home in Marston Moretaine, Bedfordshire.

"Reaching 100 is quite something. Reaching 100 with such interest in me and huge generosity from the public is very overwhelming," he said.

"People keep saying what I have done is remarkable, however it's actually what you have done for me which is remarkable."

"Please always remember, tomorrow will be a good day."

Capt Tom, who was recently treated for a broken hip and skin cancer, initially aimed to raise £1,000 for NHS Charities Together and said he set about raising the money "for the sake of the nurses and the NHS we have, because they are doing such a magnificent job".

His donations page will close at midnight but Capt Tom said people could still give money directly to the charity via their urgent appeal.

The charity's chief executive Ellie Orton said "what he has achieved will make a lasting difference".

"We cannot thank him enough for all that he's achieved and we wish him a very happy birthday, and look forward to continuing to ensure that what he's done is used to improve the lives of the NHS staff and volunteers that are giving so much to their communities at the moment," she said.

Among the thousands of birthday greetings was a personalised card from the Queen.

"I am so pleased to know that you are celebrating your one hundredth birthday," she wrote.

"I was also most interested to hear of your recent fundraising efforts for NHS Charities Together at this difficult time.

"I send my congratulations and best wishes to you on such a special occasion. Elizabeth R."

evidence so far says face coverings can have an effect in preventing an individual from spreading the disease to others if they have it and are asymptomatic," he told MPs.

"But there is also a worry that some people may think that wearing a mask protects themselves, as distinct to protecting others, and therefore they may behave in a manner that is slightly more cavalier."

Sadiq Khan, who has been calling for wider use of face coverings, welcomed Mr Johnson's announcement.

"I am pleased that the prime minister has said that non-medical face coverings will play an important role as we eventually look to lift lockdown restrictions," the Labour mayor of London said.

BA may not reopen Gatwick operation when pandemic ends

British Airways has told staff that its Gatwick airport operation may not reopen after the coronavirus pandemic passes.

The admission came in a memo, written by the head of BA's Gatwick hub and leaked by BBC News. BA's Gatwick operation, which is currently suspended, is roughly a fifth as big as its Heathrow hub.

In a separate letter to pilots, BA said it cannot rule out suspending the rest of its Heathrow operation.

In the memo to Gatwick's staff, the company says: "As you know, we suspended our Gatwick flying schedule at the start of April and there is no certainty as to when or if these services can or will return."

In the letter to pilots, BA notes that some of its rivals abroad are facing tough competition. It adds that a quarter of BA's 4,300 pilots are set to lose their jobs.

"We need to ensure that our remaining operation is efficient, flexible and cost-competitive to enable us to survive in an increasingly lean and unpredictable industry," says the letter from senior management.

On Tuesday, BA said it was set to cut up to 12,000 jobs from its 42,000-strong workforce because of a collapse in business due to the Covid-19 lockdown.

The airline's parent company, IAG, said it needed to impose a "restructuring and redundancy programme" until demand for air travel returns to 2019 levels.

The pilots' union Balpa said it was "devastated" and vowed to fight "every single" job cut.

BA has been flying from Gatwick for decades. Before its merger with BOAC in 1974 to form BA,

Airlines across the world have grounded aircraft as passenger numbers collapse

BEA flew its first routes from the hub in 1950.

Plane-makers and airlines alike have been struggling to cope with the impact of the coronavirus pandemic on their businesses.

On Monday, aerospace giant Airbus announced it was furloughing 3,200 staff at its north Wales site. Hours earlier, Airbus chief executive Guillaume Faury had warned the company was "bleeding cash at an unprecedented speed".

Mr Faury also told Airbus' 135,000 staff to brace for potentially deep job cuts and warned that its survival was at stake without immediate action.

Meanwhile, US aircraft manufacturer Boeing announced that it would cut 10% of its workforce after it said the lockdown had delivered a "body blow" to the business.

Other airlines, including BA's close rival

Virgin Atlantic, have been seeking UK government help.

The aviation industry as a whole has also been lobbying the government for assistance.

On Monday, industry body Airlines UK urged Chancellor Rishi Sunak to extend his job retention scheme beyond June.

It said airlines hit by coronavirus would face "a renewed cash crisis" if the scheme were withdrawn prematurely.

May relief be with us soon?

May Day has arrived and the distress call is loud and clear.

For many of us the first of the month means that rent is due, plus health insurance, car insurance and all the other necessary stuff to survive. Never a fun time, but right now is harder than it has ever been. Many of you still haven't received the $1200 stimulus payment, not that would go very far but it all helps, right? If it's any consolation, I am still waiting for mine too. Fortunately California has said that we can't be evicted right now, although I know that some landlords are not necessarily following the law. If that applies to you make sure to either contact your local housing department or your local council member.

There has also been a lot of confusion as to whether those of you here on visas or green cards are safe to apply for unemployment benefit. 'Safe' meaning will your status be revoked if you claim government benefits? We have been told that you are within your rights to apply for unemployment as it is not classified as a welfare handout but rather an insurance policy that you have paid in to. Hence the name UI; 'Unemployment Insurance'. Visit edd.

ca.gov to check your eligibility.

I would still recommend confirming this with either your lawyer or perhaps a financial advisor as I would rather not be held responsible for your final decision!

The same goes for access to healthcare, if it is Covid-19 related. The Californian government has stated that protecting all of our health is a priority right now and it shouldn't negatively affect visa renewals or citizenship applications at a later date. Obviously, rules, laws and circumstances are constantly changing, so it wouldn't be a bad idea to take a screenshot of what you read for safekeeping!

Even if you are successful in getting government help I know it doesn't go very far, I think you would be lucky if it even covered your over-inflated Los Angeles rent right now. I have noticed a lot of activity over at our Brits in LA Selling Group on Facebook, there are lots of great bargains to be had right now, if you happen to be one of the lucky ones who aren't struggling financially visit facebook.com/groups/britsinlaselling to have a browse and help a fellow member out at the same time.

Our Meet a Member this week is Tyler Galt, who also happens to be a good friend of mine. She hasn't had her unemployment claim approved yet so is using her excellent sewing skills to make and sell masks. She is hoping her earnings will help cover her bills but she is also donating 15% to a charity close to her heart, the Pasadena Humane Society. Please do consider purchasing from her. If you have a skill that you have adapted to try and make an income at the moment please let us know as we would love to help and share the news of as many of you as possible. You can email us at info@britsin.la

Sadly some of you are probably stuck in limbo, with nothing to sell, not eligible to claim and perhaps no one to turn to for help. If you are an actor please make sure to visit the charity The Actors Fund who are trying their best to provide support <https://actorsfund.org>.

If you are a British citizen you should consider reaching out to the British Benevolent Society of California. We are working with them to spread the word about their charity right now, as they are offering financial aid grants to those who have no where else to go. You can email them at [### DID YOU KNOW?](mailto:info@

The British Benevolent Society began in 1858 at the British Consulate as the "British Hospital and Relief Society." The group first consisted of doctors, merchants, and other professionals looking to aid their countrymen in San Francisco.

bbsofca.org or visit their website <https://bbsofca.org>. They really want to help as many people as possible. They have been going since 1858 and guiding Brits in California through rough patches ever since. Be assured that everything will be kept confidential and there are absolutely no strings attached.

Don't hesitate to contact us if you have any questions and we will do our best to help you or at least point you in the right direction.

I know it's tough right now having to stay at home, but please try and keep it up. California is doing a good job so far, our numbers are much lower than predicted at the moment, which is thanks to all of you who are sheltering in place.

Cheers!
Eileen

Meet a Member: Tyler Galt

Meet Tyler Galt from Boston Massachusetts who moved to LA 13 years ago....to pursue a whim.

Was there a particular reason you chose LA?

I had a friend who moved here for acting; we were pretty close so I decided to come visit. My most telling moment was at our first stop after leaving LAX. I looked up, accidentally making instant eye contact with a beautiful person, they smiled brightly at me, and I was just stunned. In Boston eye contact is considered aggressive, you never say hi to strangers and even friends don't hug. Even the driving is aggressive there, so aggressive that drivers from Massachusetts are called mAss-holes. LA was warm and enchanting, the polar opposite of where I came from. When I came here I had to re-learn social norms and I was happy to.

What do you miss most from home?

The warm Atlantic Ocean! I'm glad no one told me the Pacific Ocean is always freezing cold or I might not have moved here! I may have moved away once or twice and come straight back to LA. This last time is the final one. If I need to get out of LA I don't move, I take a vacation.

What was your first impression of LA and has it changed since?

That it was beautiful and inspiring. I feel like those words can really describe the zeitgeist of the city

What do you find the biggest difference is living here versus the Boston area?

Boston is more like a larger downtown LA, with a much larger dose of skid row, humid summers and nasty winters. So its majorly different but the culture is an entirely different dimension. People are so much nicer here.

Do you have a hidden gem in LA that you want to share with us?

Topanga Beach is the least crowded I've been to, the cleanest, and the water is warmer there. If you go I recommend grabbing lunch at the Inn of the 7th Ray and checking out their gift shop. It's worth the drive!

What would you suggest to others who are thinking about making the move here?

Be ready financially. Be flexible about what kind of jobs you take and the neighborhoods you'll live in. Los Angeles is hard but worth it.

Lots of our members join our group Brits in LA seeking out words of wisdom - what is the best piece of advice you've been given?

I've always loved the phrase leap of faith. It's what brought me here. So trust yourself, take the leap and remember that as long as you fight for it you will always land on your feet.

Lastly, how can we find out more about you?

Are you working on anything at the moment? Currently I'm not essential so I'm home 24/7. Unfortunately California is trying to deny my unemployment so I haven't gotten a dime and won't till they reopen the phone lines. Since there's nothing I can do about that I'm now one of the many women sewing masks and hawking them on my handmade brand Teekco on instagram. I wish I was in a position to be able to give them away so instead I am donating 15% of the proceeds to the Pasadena SPCA to help care for animals abandoned and displaced because of the coronavirus. But aside from all this, what I really want to do is go back to school for veterinary medicine. I'm slowly hacking away at my next and most meaningful leap of faith. So if anyone here is looking for volunteers, or a vet looking for a receptionist that can also help build mobility devices for our handicapped furry friends (because I also have a BFA in product design), I'm your girl.

United by trivia.....

Separated by lockdown, brought together by trivia.

That's the fun-loving Brits in LA community who continue to gather online each Tuesday night for Virtual Pub Quiz.

The latest contest saw quizmaster Sandro Monetti asking questions on everyone from Winston Churchill to Owen Wilson and conducting a group singalong of Careless Whisper.

That April 28 quiz saw the first repeat champions as Matt and Jo won for the second week in a row and kindly donated their prize, a $40 gift certificate to the Cat and Fiddle, to a friend in need.

As Dumbledore said. "Happiness can be found even in the darkest of times when one only remembers to turn on the light." That light will be turned on again for more trivia in lockdown on Tuesday May 5.

Join on Zoom, using the Meeting ID 960 556 148, log in between 7.30pm and 8 and trivia starts at 8pm sharp. Thanks to the Cat & Fiddle and Golden Road Brewing.

Stargazing with Annie Shaw

The new month will bring new beginnings. Stay strong.

ARIES: No one is more stir crazy than you right now. You might be even tempted to step out of the present and difficult restrictions. Just be sure you do not even try.

TAURUS: This is a time for you to sort out the mind space you are currently living in. Get it straightened out and you may even resolve some unfinished business. Happy Birthday!

GEMINI: Best to go with the current downtime as you really have plenty you can do. You may think you can put things off in the hope life will resolve things. Maybe it will. Time will tell.

CANCER: Your water signs are feeling this time frame more deeply than most others. Uncertainty is not something you deal well with. Keep busy and then do find time to relax.

LEO: Just don't forget to breathe and relax, it's the best way to get through this uncertain time. You are a leader so get your thoughts aligned and lead forward. The reward is peace of mind.

VIRGO: Worry is no stranger in your life. It is actually normal for you. Time will go by whether you stress or not. Reach out to some one who needs your wisdom. The reward is peace of mind.

LIBRA: Your boss Venus is going backwards in Gemini your cousin sign. While it is a time of uncertainty it need not be a time for instability so get ready to move quickly when the time is right.

SCORPIO: This time probably does not feel especially difficult for you if you are isolating. You are ok with your own company usually so keep a positive attitude and be at peace in this time frame.

SAGITTARIUS: There are some folks who do not have any idea why you are upbeat and in good spirits. This is your nature, so be ready to just feel good, no matter what.

CAPRICORN: You are about to get busier in the world around you. It's so much better for you overall. Whatever the situation is make time to relax and be aware of your thoughts.

AQUARIUS: While the current times are uncertain knowing you can help other people can really help you to process things. You should also benefit by working on healthy habits for yourself.

PISCES: While your mysterious boss Neptune is living with you it is likely you will have some enlightening dreams. As one of the most intuitive signs a lot of these dreams are prophetic. Keep this in mind.

Covid 19 fears leave Agüero reluctant to take the field again

Sergio Agüero this week became the most high-profile player to admit that he is scared about the prospect of playing football again due to the coronavirus.

Agüero, the Manchester City striker, conceded in a frank interview with Spanish TV programme El Chiringuito, that either he or one of his teammates could contract the killer disease, especially if they are rushed back into action.

Under Premier League proposals, competitive games could return as early as June 8 even though at present, the country is on lockdown. Agüero, 31, has been spending the last few weeks in his Cheshire home with his Argentinian girlfriend Sofia Calzetti, but could return to training in the next couple of weeks.

"The majority of players are scared because they have family, they have children, they have babies, parents," Agüero said.

"It does scare me but I have just been here with my girlfriend, I haven't had contact with other people and they say that to contract the disease is very rare and difficult but they say that there are people who have it, and they don't have symptoms and they can infect you, that's why I've stayed at home. You can be infected and you don't know anything about it."

Like most Premier League clubs, City have closed their training ground in order to prevent the spread of the disease. The players were initially told last month that they should come back on May 4, but they were informed recently that training is due to restart ten days later.

Agüero, who is City's record goal scorer, believes that training will be very different once it resumes.

"When we go back, I imagine that we will be very tense," he added.

"We will be very careful and the moment someone feels ill, you will think: 'What's gone on there'. I hope there is a vaccine so all this ends."

Antonio Rüdiger, the Chelsea centre back, was equally reluctant about returning to play. "If we continue to play and there is a danger, and we ignore that while people are dying somewhere in the world, I don't know if that would sit right on my conscience," he said. "If everything fits and it comes from those in charge that it's OK, there's no danger, then we can start. But if there is a danger that it will start again and more people will get infected [we can't start again]."

All football came to a halt a couple of weeks after City had triumphed 2-1 in the first leg of their Champions League last-16 tie against Real Madrid. Uefa hopes to resume European competition in August. Agüero would like fans present at the second leg, although the authorities are unlikely to agree to such an idea.

"It's football and obviously the fans help and obviously we would like to play the return leg with fans because it would be nice and it would help with the atmosphere," he said.

"It's not an easy game, it's Real Madrid we are playing against and we know that the tie is not over. We got a good result in the first leg but anything can happen.

In an interview Agüero said he was scared of unwittingly contracting the virus

We have to be focused again and ready like we were for the first leg in the Bernabéu and we know we have a chance of going through."
